Lingerie Is Secret Of A
Woman's Life

This Woman Says She Can Tell Their Character By
What They Wear

"Show me a woman's clothes," said Miss Rhoda Nickells, who will be seen here soon with "Flo-Pin," the musical comedy that makes an expose of the lingerie shops, and I'll tell you her past, present and future."

A well known health enthusiast once said that after he got a glimpse of a woman's shoes and what she wore on her head for a hat, he could tell just what and how much was in that head.

Miss Nickells snuffed at this surprise.

MISS RHODA NICKELLS

psychology deduced from hats and shoes. "A woman," she said, "gives into an almost impersonal way. Shoes must be comfortable as well as attractive; chapeaux must be becoming as well as chic, but lives there a woman with soul who hasn't spent hours running ribbons through her lingerie, and days, embroidering distorted rombs in conspicuous places and putting little beautifying touches to her lingerie to bring it to the power of seductiveness."

"A woman depends on her milliner's taste for her hats; on the man who sells her boots for her boots. But no woman ever buys the most gaudy lingerie or the most flimsy chiffon without adding some personal touches of her own. And even in woman who can afford to shop in the most exclusive shops, prefers to concoct something out of a yard of chiffon and a motif of lace for ballet slippers."

"So I say that a woman puts her personality into her lingerie; let me see that part of her attire and I'll tell you what she's like."

Viennese give an asterisked clue to the mind and heart of their wearers. The lingerie that is half and half, silk above, and cotton below, is typical of its wearers. And the less

NOTED SOLOISTS
WILL PLAY HERE

By PERCY MONTGOMERY.

The audience which attends the concert of the Minneapolis Symphony orchestra at Liberty hall Monday evening and Tuesday afternoon and evening next, will hear the work of a great international organization.

A majority of the players have performed in St. Petersburg, Berlin, Prague, Brussels, Amsterdam, Rome, Paris, Munich and other musical centers. The result is a rendering of famous music in a perfect way.

The single instrument, the phonographic reproduction of the piano, seldom from a standard work can never approach the composite whole of a symphony.

The audience is held completely the entire time the orchestra plays, because no other form of music approaches in any way the perfection of symphony exposition.

Harriet McConnell, with a superb voice, acting as soloist, leads in the vocal rendition of some of the work. Back of her artistic presentation of a theme is the carefully worked out background of harmony, which completes the human effort—the whole a thing of infinite charm.

Henry Williams, with his harp, a tremendously difficult instrument to play, fits his work into the general combination of scientifically grouped musical pieces in both solo and part work. This man, a Welshman, has made a reputation as a harpist here and in Europe. He accompanies the orchestra on its tour and affords El Paso people a chance to hear the instrument played by a master.

Labate, an Italian, and a former member of the Haverre Ensemble, is an artist on the oboe, an instrument capable of rendering, in a most pastoral scenes of the Greek shepherd. The tone of Pan and Orpheus and the oboe is his, and the work of this peculiar and little understood instrument is vividly brought to the ear of the audience by his splendid effort.

The care of these musicians, their transportation and the preservation of the delicate instruments used by them is a great physical task. It is hard to say which is the more temperamental—the artist or his medium. The orchestra carries 20 different musical instruments, practically all known kinds with the exception of the pipe organ. There are first violins, second violins, cellos, double basses, a harp, flutes, piccolos, oboes, English horns, clarinets, bass clarinets, bassoons, contra-bassoons, horns, trumpets, trombones, tubas, kettle drums and a various assortment grouped under percussion instruments.

The injury of a priceless violin or the harp would throw out of balance the whole tour.

Galvanizing this unique organization into the fire and forcefulness of playing as one man, is Emil Oberhofer, the conductor. This man's fame among music lovers is based upon his pianissimo conclusions to symphonic presentations. Other men have stood out in the musical world for the grandeur of their climaxes. Oberhofer thrills his hearers by sweeping aside tradition and hushing the playing of 85 instruments of the faintest whisper.

material used in the making, the cooler the result. Compare the shirley-length, high backed, long sleeved, embroidered and decorated, that exist for the same purpose. The second set can be carried in a gold mesh bag; and the difference in price would buy both a ton of coal and a bar of sugar. Its quality, not quantity, that counts.

"Stick to the kind best suited to you," were her last words on the subject. "be it red flannel or pink crepe de chine. And be sure the result will tell all about you better than a page in 'Who's Who.'"

Hard To Resist The Lure Of Hawaii
Actress Quotes Mark Twain's Book

Virginia Stuart With The Drama
"A Daughter Of The Sun"

THIS most ideal climate is a question open to debate and various parts of the world put forward their claims to having it," said Miss Virginia Stuart at the Crawford in "Daughters of the Sun." "But almost by universal consent the climate of the Hawaiian Islands is given the preference when the subject of climate is broached. Poets, writers of every description, have all grown most enthusiastic over the ideal climate and health conditions of this Paradise of the Pacific."

"The climate there is of the semi-tropical variety. There is but slight variation during the entire year. Surf bathing and all aquatic sports are indulged in, especially by children, whether it be in January or July and still a temperature of 80 degrees is seldom recorded. The trade winds, which bring health and comfort intact, from the south, are unknown in Hawaii and thunderstorms are rare."

"The lure of the islands is a powerful hard to resist and climate is one of the great factors making up the attraction of these 'Blessed Isles.' Mark Twain's eulogium on the Hawaiian group is in fact and stands as the epitome of all that has been said about the islands. He says: 'No other land in all the world has any deep, strong charm but one; no other land could so longingly and benevolently haunt me, sleeping and waking, through half a life time, as that one has done. Other things leave me, but it abides; other things change, but it remains the same. For me its balmy airs are always blowing its summer seas flashing in the sun; the pulsing of its surf beat is in my ears; I can see its gull-flocks, its leaping, its canoees, its plucky palms, drowsing, floating like islands above the cloud rack; I can feel the spirit of its woodland solitude; I can hear the splash of its breakers in my nostrils still lives the breath of flowers that perished 20 years ago.'"

Young Texan In Copenhagen Sends
Home Danish Tribute To America

A eloquent tribute to America and Americans is contained in an article, which appeared some time ago in the Berlingske Tidende of Copenhagen, Denmark, a translation of which has been received in El Paso by Mrs. A. B. Meagher, of 410 West Boulevard, from her grandson, Maher Moore. Young Mr. Moore is chief of the codings and communications at the American legation in Copenhagen. He is a native Texan, born at Cameron, and is the son of Morris J. Moore, of Los Angeles. While in this country he was during the war he mastered the work which led to his present position with the legation at Copenhagen. A translation of the article in the Danish publication follows:

Text of the Tribute.
"You are, after all, the only ones who stand with a single twist of the wrist you straightened out the little affair down there on the western front; beat it back home to the U. S. A. doffed the kaiser for the Arrow, pulled the brass shoulder strap, packed your suitcases full of samples of all the goods that America whines and bawls and lammers together from New York to San Francisco, and made your triumphal entry into Copenhagen long before it had begun to dawn upon your dear allies that the war was over and that it might be a good thing to have the wheels of commerce moving again."

"You were the first messengers of peace. It took coal from Pennsylvania, checked clothes from Boston, highly polished cars from Detroit, and golden fruit from California you brought to Copenhagen—and you had an entirely new method of selling—a method as energetic as your square jawed chin, as penetrating as your sharp eyes from behind your horn rimmed spectacles."

Americans Sell Goods.
"You were not so mild as the Germans; not so charming as the Frenchmen; not so dignified as the Englishmen. When you talk it sounds like the grinding of the dictaphones in your office, and your hands appear always to be feeling for the keys of a typewriter, but, nevertheless, you sold."

"We know that Copenhagen is far too small for you. You are used to thinking in millions. Figures under that have a deadening effect upon the wild fantasy of your cool and calculating brains."

"You do not feel at home in our 'dold houses. Your genius is developed in the full strength only in the skyscraper. When you rise 40 stories without a stop in your express elevator back on Broadway then your brain cells juggle with plans as daring and as dizzy as the mighty span of the Brooklyn bridge. Here you can never step into an elevator without having to step right out again."

For a Bigger Demand.
"But you made the best of the little conditions—wonderfully well. When we ask your strong jaws come together on a huge slice of steak at your 'lightning breakfast,' we know that you are dreaming of your home, of your home in Sweden, to Russia, to Poland, to Lithuania, to Estonia, and to Germany. You would build a bridge over the Atlantic of heavily laden ramps enroute from New York to Copenhagen."

Club Offer.
Old and new subscribers of The El Paso Herald may receive the Photoplay Review for one whole year, and The Herald for three months, both for $2.55. This splendid offer is good only for a short time—Adv.

Home-Made Pie Saves Woman From Injury

Pleasanton, Calif., Jan. 24.—A pie saved the life, or at least serious injury, of Mrs. Mary Waterhouse, of this city. She was carrying the pie to a window still where it was to cool, when a bullet, piercing the pie, struck the pie tin, and glanced aside.

The bullet had been fired by Henry Moore, who had been shooting stumps from some property. He would stand at a distance from his dynamite charge, setting it off with a shot from his rifle.

The scheme worked perfectly on two occasions, but the third bullet went wrong and crashed through the window and into the pie.
